IT'S ALMOST LIKE BEING IN LOVE...

Brigadoon opened on Broadway in 1947. Its Australian premiere was at Her Majesty's Theatre in Melbourne in 1951. But the musical's universal popularity came from the 1954 film version, which starred Gene Kelly, Cyd Charisse and Van Johnson. It was the first big hit for Lerner and Loewe, who went on to create My Fair Lady, Camelot and my own personal favourite, Gigi. This love story, contrasting empty city life with the warmth and simplicity of the country, is as charming and timeless as ever. I have been really encouraged by our subscribers overwhelmingly positive response to our staging this musical for the first time in decades.

Welcome back to Rohan Browne, Nancye Hayes and Sally Bourne. Rohan is one of our favourite leading men. Who saw him recently in the new dance theatre piece Self? What a star! Nancye Hayes, a beloved household name, has the unique distinction of having both appeared in and also directed shows for us. And this is Sally Bourne's third show with us.

It is a pleasure to see Elise McCann return in a major role after her Helpmann Award winning performance in the national tour of Matilda The Musical. A warm welcome to The Production Company family to Cameron Mitchell, choreographing his first show for us and Joel Granger, Stephen Hall, Stefanie Jones, Luke Joslin, Genevieve Kingsford and Matthew Manahan. I am delighted to see some old friends in the ensemble and to be welcoming new, talented faces.

Welcome back to director Jason Langley and musical director Michael Tyack. They brought us another recent success with their production of Dusty. Re-creating the enchantment and whimsy of a lost town in the Scottish highlands are some TPC favourites – costumes by Isaac Lummis, set by Christina Smith and lighting by Matt Scott. And sound design is, once again, in the capable hands of the brilliant team from System Sound.

Our own orchestra, organised by the dynamic James Kempster, goes from strength to strength. No wonder we attract some of Melbourne's best musicians.

We always welcome new supporters. I invite you to take a moment to read the Patron invitation inserted in this program and become a Patron for 2018 which will be our twentieth season - an achievement to celebrate!

*So take my hand and let's go roamin'

THE HIGHLANDS, NOT MUNCHKINLAND

JOHN HAY-MACKENZIE INTERVIEWS THE DIRECTOR JASON LANGLEY

Most people know Brigadoon from the 1954 Hollywood film, starring Gene Kelly and Cyd Charisse. But the stage version is very different — far removed from the Gene-and-Cyd Dance Show. In fact, the film itself is also far removed from reality. It was shot entirely on MGM's sound stages using the Munchkinland sets from The Wizard of Oz.

Jason Langley, who is directing Brigadoon for The Production Company, believes the show is as relevant today as when it was first staged on Broadway in 1947. In fact, Jason and his creative team have taken a whole new approach to the work, bringing in a darker sense of realism, as well as updating the action to the present day.

'I think it is very timely to be doing Brigadoon in October 2017,' Jason says. 'The show champions a return to community values, the simplicity of true connection, and love as an overall ideal. These days we are missing that sense of community: a whole generation is growing up not experiencing the world I knew as a child. There are more lonely people now than ever.'

In the show, the lead character, Tommy, sings There But For You Go I. 'This is an expression of his own loneliness,' says Jason. 'Tommy lives in New York, is engaged to be married, but is still isolated and unhappy — a situation that rings as true for the present as it did when the show was written.'

But for many in our modern audiences, the 1940s are just as alien as the feudal Scotland of the 1700s. I thought if we bring Brigadoon up to date, we will know why these characters react as they do. The American boys, Tommy and Jeff, may themselves find the Brigadoon community quite alien, but the Brigadoon community will find them incredibly alien. That's what set my imagination ringing.'

For anyone who needs reminding, hikers Tommy and Jeff stumble upon Brigadoon, a village in the Scottish Highlands. The experience changes their lives.

But Brigadoon on stage is far from the folksy tartan-and-shortbread village seen on the screen. 'This is not just a fantasy of a town that disappears. Brigadoon is never in one century long enough to be affected by what is going on in the outside world,' says Jason. 'This is a town that has fortified itself against encroaching evil and years of English occupation and slaughter. The script describes its inhabitants as peasants, subsistence farmers and people of the earth. They are not the gorgeous 1950s silhouettes with 1950s hairdos we see in the film.'

This darker approach is reflected in Christina Smith's scenery and Isaac Lummis' earthy costumes. 'I didn't want a small quaint Scottish town, so Christina came up with the idea of a tear in time, a rip in the idyllic landscape. Her set is a canopy of hundreds of crosses, to ward off evil spirits, and Isaac's costumes are more hand-me-downs, with tartan kept for best — in the wedding scene.'

'This is a different Brigadoon from any other production seen in Australia,' Jason says. 'I've taken the script and turned it sideways and upside down — cleared out the cobwebs and re-imagined it for today's audience.'

Jason is adamant that Brigadoon is not, and has never been, a creaky, old-fashioned musical. 'It was written at a time when musical theatre, as we know it, was being discovered, explored and created,' he says. 'Such masterpieces of the stage dared to deal with subject matter well ahead of its time. Yet you don't have to dig deep to find what is pertinent to us today at all. Brigadoon is a book musical, which is a bit of a dying art. It's wonderful material for actors because it's blending scene into song and back into scene. Big voices, terrific tunes and gorgeous melodies; large cast of 29, full orchestra and no synthesisers.'

'There are no dream ballets, either. But it would be silly not to honour Rohan Browne's marvelous dance skills. So, in a nod to the movie, our choreographer, Cameron Mitchell, has devised some beautiful dance sequences.'

'Perhaps, in the 1940s, Scotland was a fantasyland to Americans, Lerner and Loewe, and Broadway. But Scotland is not a fantasyland to us. We have far more knowledge of it, particularly now the world has become smaller. We don't have to hammer people over the head, screaming "SCOTLAND! WE'RE SCOTTISH!". I think we let Scotland speak for itself.'

JOHN HAY-MACKENZIE IS ON THE PRODUCTION COMPANY BOARD AND EDITS THE PROGRAMS.
